New human services commissioner makes 4 promises for first 90 days

From ST. PAUL PIONEER PRESS: Minnesota's new human services commissioner - the state's third in as many months - promised on Wednesday to regain the public's trust in the state's largest and troubled agency. "There's nothing more important for the Minnesota

Department of Human Services than to be trustworthy for the people of Minnesota," Commissioner Jodi Harpstead told a panel of state lawmakers in her second day on the job and first appearance before them since being appointed by Democratic Gov. Tim Walz last month. "Trustworthy to the people who depend on our services to live full lives in the community, and trustworthy to the taxpayers of Minnesota, whose resources we're entrusted with, to use them properly, wisely and effectively."
