VOTE FOR JOBS

Jobs are on the ballot this November. Beyond the presidential race, the next Congress will determine if we take action on the critical issues facing our economy.

The stakes are too high to sit on the sidelines and the single most powerful tool each one of us has is our voice and our vote.

At the El Centro Area Chamber of Commerce, we are working to ensure that all voters embrace their right to be heard on the issues that will shape our future.

It's easy to be cynical in this political environment. With the current domestic and international turmoil, many people believe that their vote won't make a difference.

The truth is that every vote and voice matters in this election. We are not telling you who to vote for. But if you want your voice to be heard, and you want to make a difference, vote for your chosen candidates this election day. With so many close contests this year, every vote really does count.

Between now and November 8, we are working hard to spread the message that economic growth and a free enterprise system are the core ingredients in creating jobs, prosperity, and opportunity for all.

Visit www.VoteForJobs.com to get started and make your mark this election cycle.

A portion of the proceeds will benefit Between Women and their fight to find a cure for cancer.
I would like to take this opportunity to thank everyone for their continued support of the El Centro Area Chamber of Commerce and the El Centro Chamber Foundation. I want to urge everyone to please invest the time and effort to get out and vote on November 8th. Please encourage all your staff and employees to also get out and vote. As you see here in the newsletter there is a link to the US Chamber’s website that will explain many of the issues that we will be voting on. This is a very important election cycle this year with many local, state and federal issues that we have the privilege of voting on. So once again please everyone get out and vote.

Thank you everyone who supported and participated in the El Centro Chamber Foundation Imperial Valley Girls Rock event. It was a great success and wonderful to see all the involvement from throughout the valley. This event raised $7,000 for scholarships to help graduating high school students and existing college students from the Imperial Valley.

Please be reminded of the Air Show Gala Fashion Show & Ladies Night on Friday, October 7, 2016 at the Imperial Palms Resort. This has become a very nice evening out for the women of the valley. Please come and enjoy the evening. Don’t forget the Annual Christmas Parade on Saturday, December 3, 2016. The theme this year is “Cruisin Down Candy Cane Lane.” It will be here before we know it. Any of you wanting to participate in the parade please submit your entries early as this will help with the coordination of the parade.

The El Centro Chamber of Commerce will not be having a mixer in October but we hope to see you at the Joint Chambers “Fall into the Season Annual Mixer” hosted by the Imperial Valley Joint Chambers of Commerce. The event will be at the Roadway Inn at the Airport from 5:30 PM to 7:30 PM. It will be a great opportunity to meet and talk with many of our elected officials and candidates running for local office.

Again thank you for your continued support of the El Centro Chamber.
Assessing Vulnerability

Approximately 2 million American workers report being victims of workplace violence each year. This number accounts for only those incidents that are documented and reported; it’s estimated that many more incidents go unreported and undocumented.

Although no industry or workplace is completely immune to incidents of violence, research suggests that certain industries are at an increased risk for violence. You must consider many relevant factors to determine if your organization is at an increased risk for workplace violence. Information from government sources can assist you in this assessment.

Factors such as industry, location, previous incidents of violence and the presence of cash on site should be a part of your assessment. According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics:

• Food establishments (restaurants, bars and fast-food businesses) are very vulnerable to workplace violence; 67 percent of employee deaths at these establishments are a result of workplace violence
• Of the individuals working in night-time retail who die on the job, 48 percent die as a result of workplace violence homicide
• Custodial health care and mental health facilities also have a high incident rate for workplace violence. In fact, 27 percent of these workers who die at work are victims of homicide
• Males represent 80 percent of the workplace homicide victims
• Roughly two thirds of workplace homicides were perpetrated by assailants with no known relationship to the victim

In addition, research suggests that individuals with an inclination to act out are more likely to do so when social and economic stressors are present in their lives.

When assessing risk, consider economic pressures such as layoffs, unemployment and other measures of financial difficulty.

Factors to Consider

An assessment of the risk of violence in the workplace should include research on prior violent events in that particular workplace and surrounding businesses and competitors. Contact local law enforcement authorities for more information on violence that occurs at or near your workplace. Reviewing personnel files can uncover a trend or pattern of an employee whose prior workplace conduct may indicate violent conduct in the future.

Another factor to consider is the spread of hours in which employees are in the workplace. For example, a would-be rapist is less likely to enter a downtown high rise during the day when the office is full of people than during the evening when a skeleton crew is on duty.

Also, pay attention to upcoming changes in your workplace. Although layoffs, terminations, demotions and disciplinary actions do not cause workplace violence, they are sometimes used as an excuse, by the already escalating employee, to rationalize violence.

Likewise, pay attention to the employee who fails to obtain an expected promotion or one who believes that his complaints and grievances did not receive a proper response, as these events are often used by violent individuals as fuel for their escalating hostility.

Be sure to recognize obsessive romantic interest in a co-worker that is not returned. Numerous incidents of violence were perpetrated by individuals who reported that they were frustrated in their attempts to initiate relationships.

Remember, these events in the lives of violent individuals do not cause violence. Rather, these events are more accurately described as sometimes coexisting with violence. Data suggests that for some people in our society, aggressive acting out is a part of how they behave. The coexisting event increases the person’s perceived stress level. This increase in stress is often the triggering event or excuse that the individual uses to act out.

For help in assessing the risk of violence in a particular workplace, see the California Division of Occupational Safety and Health’s Workplace Security Profile.

WASHINGTON, D.C.—The U.S. Chamber of Commerce, leading a broad coalition including the Texas Association of Business, National Automobile Dealers Association, the National Association of Manufacturers, National Association of Wholesaler Distributors, National Federation of Independent Business, National Retail Federation, and more than 50 other national and Texas business groups, filed a legal challenge to the Obama administration’s overtime rule, arguing that Department of Labor (DOL) exceeded its statutory authority in issuing the regulation and violated the Administrative Procedure Act. The DOL’s rule is currently slated to take effect December 1.

“The DOL went too far in the new overtime regulation,” said Randy Johnson, senior vice president of Labor, Immigration, and Employee Benefits for the U.S. Chamber. “We have heard from our members, small businesses, nonprofits, and other employers that the salary threshold is going to result in significant new labor costs and cause many disruptions in how work gets done. Furthermore, the automatic escalator provision means that employers will have to go through their reclassification analysis every three years. In combination, the new overtime rule will result in salaried professional employees being converted to hourly wages, and it will reduce workplace flexibility, remote electronic access to work, and opportunities for career advancement.”

The suit charges that, by setting an excessively high salary threshold for determining who qualifies as “executive, administrative and professional employees,” the rule departs from the intent established by Congress in the Fair Labor Standards Act and consistently administered by DOL for more than 75 years. Furthermore, DOL ignored regional and industry differences that have previously been acknowledged, resulting in a “one size fits none” salary threshold. The suit also argues that the provision to automatically update the salary threshold every three years without a rulemaking or taking input from affected parties is not authorized by the Fair Labor Standards Act or any other relevant statute.

In addition to the private groups’ suit, a coalition of 21 states filed a challenge at the same time reinforcing the range of entities who will have severe problems complying with this regulation. “The Chamber is grateful to be joined by a coalition of states and state attorneys general who are committed to improving economic growth and career opportunity, and to defending the rule of law,” said Johnson.

The lawsuit was filed in the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Texas. ■
