

Rory Hoskins is full-time law student at Loyola University Chicago and a part-time faculty in Loyola's School of Social Work masters degree program. Prior to law school, Hoskins worked in economic development holding both public sector and private sector jobs. From 2006-2009, Rory worked in a tax consulting role at KPMG. Hoskins has a master's degree in social work from Loyola (1999), and he holds a bachelor's degree in government from the University of Texas at Austin (1992).

Hoskins' work at KPMG included advising clients on tax credits and other economic incentives, site selection, and negotiating terms for economic incentive agreements with state and local units of government. Hoskins has worked on projects in every region of the continental United States, Europe, and Asia. Hoskins was directly recruited by KPMG after six years of employment at the Illinois Department of Commerce and Economic Opportunity (DCEO).

At DCEO, Hoskins specialized in tax credits and incentives from 2004 to 2006. DCEO was formerly known as the Department of Commerce and Community Affairs (DCCA). At DCCA, he was assigned to the Small Business Development Center programs where Hoskins worked in Chicago neighborhoods/communities including Logan Square, Pilsen/Little Village, Back of the Yards, Uptown, Chinatown, Englewood, and Auburn-Gresham. His small business advocacy regularly included trips to Rockford, Peoria, Bloomington-Normal, and to several south and west suburban communities.

Hoskins began his Chicago career in 1994 when he was hired as a caseworker to help children and families who were involved in our state's foster care system. After working in foster family settings for three years, Hoskins accepted a position as Health and Disability Administrator in a Head Start program.

Youth programs are important to Hoskins. He is a coach in the Forest Park Youth Soccer Association, and is working with the Park District and the local school district to establish a Teen Center in Forest Park. He hosts an annual Family Pool Party for the children and families in Forest Park and surrounding communities. Hoskins' volunteerism extends beyond Forest Park. He has volunteered and continues to volunteer in a variety of settings including Special Olympics, Mikva's Challenge, and Voices for Illinois Children.
