Xcel Energy Outlines Path to Achieving Ambitious Carbon Reductions

A message from Preston E. Gibson, III Xcel Energy Area Manager, Community and Local Government Affairs and Jeffco EDC Board Chair:

As you may know, Xcel Energy announced its ambitious carbon vision several months ago and I am pleased to provide you with our new carbon report. The report outlines our path to serving customers with 100 percent carbon-free electricity by 2050 and to reducing carbon emissions 80 percent by 2030.

We're already making significant progress. In 2018, we cut carbon emissions 38 percent from 2005 levels — an additional 3 percent compared to last year's results. It's notable because according to the U.S. Energy Information Administration, carbon emissions for the electric power sector increased 2 percent in 2018.

You can learn more about our carbon reduction efforts and our goals in the new carbon report. It also includes a groundbreaking study of our goals by climate modeling experts with the University of Denver — it's an industry first for this type of analysis. You will find the report, along with one-page summaries of the overall report and the scientific analysis, at xcelenergy.com/carbon.
